

Considered the "People's Marathon," the Marine Corps Marathon has many patriotic participants who run carrying the colors of the nation and the Corps.

"PEOPLE'S MARATHON"

Still a Major Sports Event Despite Slow Times

Story by R. R. Keene

It was a great autumn morning for 70,000 spectators at the 23rd Marine Corps Marathon held last Oct. 25 in Washington, D.C. However, the temperatures, which started in the mid-50s and reached the low 70s, proved to be a little too hot for the more than 13,700 participants, who took 10 minutes to clear the starting line after the blast from a 105-mm. howitzer from Marine Corps Base,

48

Quantico, Va., signaled the race's start.

Two hours, 25 minutes and 30 seconds later, Weldon Johnson of Washington, D.C., in his first marathon, completed the 26-mile, 385-yard trek which started and ended at the Marine Corps War Memorial.

Although he led the field from the five-mile marker, Johnson finished more than 10 minutes off the course record of 2:14:01 set in 1987 by Jeff Scuffins of Hagerstown, Md. Even with that time, Johnson was six minutes and two seconds faster than his closest rival, Mark Corasfalt, a member of the British Royal Navy/Marines, who led his team to its 13th victory over the U.S. Marines in the Challenge Cup competition with a time of 2:31:32.

The first woman to cross the finish line was Kimberly Markland, a major in the U.S. Air Force, with a personal best time of 2:49:06.

It was Captain Alex Hetherington, who was the first U.S. Marine to cross the finish line ninth overall with a time of 2:34:32. He led this year's Team Marine which was coached by Gunnery Sergeant Farley Simon. In 1983, GySgt Simon became the only U.S. Marine to ever win the Marine Corps Marathon.

This year's marathon marked the first Armed Forces competition which saw teams of five men and three women from the Marine Corps, Army, Navy and Air Force competing against each other. It was not a good day for the Marines, who may need to rethink their approach toward competing in the marathon if they ever hope to field consistently winning teams. In addition to losing again to the Brits, they finished last in the field against their sister services, with the Air Force taking the lead, followed by the Army and the Navy.

In other marathon-related competition, Robert Trice of Delaware won the Special Olympics mini-marathon 5-kilometer event with a time of 18 minutes, beating dozens of similar competitors from all over the East Coast. In the wheelchair competition, Jason Fowler of Boston finished ahead of 13 others with a time of 1:58:18.

But it was the heat that stole last year's show and slowed the race to the slowest winning time in the race's history. More than 1,000 of the runners required treatment for injuries, mostly heat-related seizures and dehydration. Twenty-eight runners required hospitalization.

It could have been worse had it not been for the 2,000 Marines and sailors who supported the marathon in everything from passing out fluids and fruit to the runners, to providing immediate medical assistance from eight medical stations located on the course. According to marathon officials, the volunteers set up and manned 430 tables, positioned 5,655 traffic cones, erected 28 tents, set up 20,000 feet of snow fence and used 156,000 feet of rope to cordon off various sights and areas.

At the finish the runners were greeted by handlers who wrapped them in space blankets, guided them to food and drink and looked to their well-being.

All told, those working the marathon passed out 450 pounds of ice, 15,000 space blankets, 6,100 gallons of Gatorade, 2,000 gallons of soft drinks, 25,000 gallons of water, 303,000 paper cups, 80,000 cookies, 8,000 bananas, 520 dozen doughnuts and 138 pounds of petroleum jelly and set up 130 portable rest rooms.

The heat may have slowed the field, but it didn't seem to bother the 70,000 spectators who lined the route, cheering on the runners.

MARINE FINISHERS AND TIMES

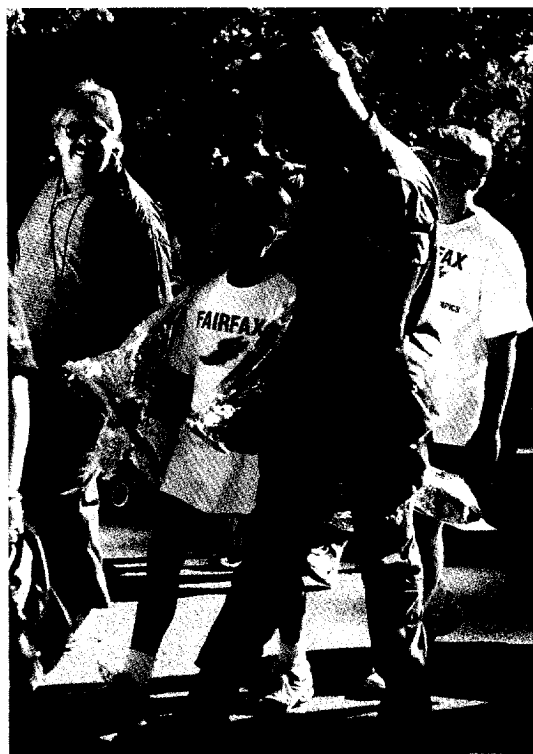

SSgt Sean Newman

Most of the participants are in a contest with themselves to just finish the race, and often walk or barely jog the 26-mile, 385-yard course through Washington, D.C.

Finishers in the Special Olympics mini-marathon 5-kilo-meter event were greeted and assisted by Marine second lieutenants from The Basic School at Quantico, Va., who volunteered to help with the day's events.

Cpl Charlie Rush

Above: Runners received a break from the route's many ups and downs as they made their way along the flat ground of Hains Point, which is nearly surrounded by the Potomac River, between Washington, D.C., and Arlington, Va.

Right: The Marine Corps War Memorial is always inspiring to runners of the marathon who, upon seeing Felix DeWeldon's version of the flag raising over two Jima, know the finish is near.
